One key opportunity which has arisen out of the current pandemic crisis is our chance to transform our habitation-economy model. It concerns me that no Indian citizenship holder has won the Nobel Prize in any of the sciences, despite India's National Gross Expenditure on Research and Development (GERD) in science and technology to over Rs 1 lakh crore annually. The third aspect is about making the rewards of development reach across rural-urban, across genders, and across economic groups. ^ Kalam & Rajan 1998, Dedication. Just when the deal was about to go through, the US government blocked the sale as the material was being used in their strategic missiles. Denied a critical product, India started learning more about it; and discovered something startling. The post-pandemic India has a chance to not just go back to older times, but also to create novel pathways. How do we create this ecosystem of constant improvement in a time when India is being seen as a global opportunity to cushion against the Chinese dominance in manufacturing in a post-COVID world? One of the firm thoughts of Dr. Kalam was that forward-looking societies need to be careful about selecting who their adversaries are. India with its market can also build collaborations across nations based on technological abilities. ISBN 9780143423683. See More POST On : A Special Books By Srijan Pal Singh The nation remembers its 11th President, Dr. APJ Abdul Kalam in many forms - missile man, space scientist, nuclearization leader and people's President. Dr. Kalam devoted a decade of his life pursuing the model of PURA or Providing Urban Amenities in Rural Areas - where he promoted a model of connectivities in village clusters to spur economic development and urban class services of healthcare and education in India's 600,000 villages. Views expressed are the author's personal.) In chapter 1 of the book the authors stress the importance of a vision for India, using nations like US, China, Malaysia, and Israel as examples.[3] However, they also point out that this vision should be original, rather than imitating other nations. A committee of top research labs was then constituted to make our own beryllium diaphragm. Unsourcesd material may be challenged and removed. Past successes, too, bear them out. The US diaphragms were made from beryllium rods produced in Japan — and the Japanese makers had outsourced the beryllium from us! India was among the top four producers of this rare element. He was the Adviser for Policy and Technology to Dr APJ Abdul Kalam and co-authored the book Advantage India. For example, we were able to launch the green revolution at a time when experts had all but given up on India ever becoming self-sufficient in food. But not only did India endure through one of the longest lockdowns across the world it silently revamped its entire medical supply industry. By June India was making 200,000 kits a day and by the end of July 2020, India opened up to export PPE and other protective supplies to the rest of the world. This is a broader and inclusive nationalism we need. The year 2020 marks a landmark year - it is the milestone of the Vision 2020, which he laid down two decades ago as a pathway to an economically developed India with societal inclusion. The cornerstone of this vision relied on three principal factors - we need to realize and unleash our potential as a nation, we need to build an economy based on technological leadership and finally, we need a balanced growth model where rural and urban can not only co-exist but thrive together. While we co-authored Dr. Kalam's final book, Advantage India in 2015, he told me a story that highlights this aspect of identifying our latent national potential. Pune-based Serum India is planning to produce 100 million doses of COVID vaccine as soon as the clinical trials are positive. Powerful nations like India will eventually win over their select opponents. Technology provides developing economies the ability to leapfrog certain stages of development. A nation is as great as the challenger it chooses to confront. (Srijan Pal Singh is the CEO of Kalam Centre. Penguin India.
